IS CRINOLINE OUT OF FASHION? [Paris (October 22) Correspondence London Morning Post.]

IS CRINOLINE OUT OF Monting Post.]

I meet in the streets of Paris, and sometimes at an evening reception, a toilette of the period of the First Empire; short-waisted, and certainly there can be no crinoline or iron-hooped anything under a somewhat scanty robe, such as Lady Jersey dancod in at Almack's in the days of George IV. You can see the pretty feet, and some idea may be arrived at as to how nature has sculptured the whole of the graceful female form. It is surely a pleasant thing to contemplate ladies' feet again. For the last ten years, if one writes history correctly, we must confess we have seen little of that pretty feature of female loveliness. This has been a decided loss, for nature has wisely provided that young people should fall in love with other's feet and ankless as well as their eyes. At the promenade in the Bois you meet with ladies whose dresses gracefully respond to the movements of the frame; and certainly there cannot be any cunningly conceived substructure of steel and textile substances under that empire style of costume. I therefore conclude that there are ladies of fashion moving about in the most refined society honestly without crinoline; but they are not yet a majority. You find most ladies, on the contracty, wearing dresses which spread out at the bottom, and show a train which begins to be as long as those worn at court. From the waist downwards this ever-spreading trailing robe must be supported by some material. Is it crinoline? Is it fube in another shape, or is it a mass of clustering underclothing of cotton or lines! How am I to find out that? You cannot with propriety ask a lady what she wears under the external silk or eatin (such was ever intended to be a jealous secret). or satin (such was ever intended to be a jealous

And take upon us the mystery of things, As if we were God's spies, as said King Lear on a similar courtly question. It would be exclusively mean to ask the lady's maid privately and confidentially of what underneath material her misuress is composed. How are you to find out? I have watched sublimely grand ladies get out of a carriage, under the impression that the accident of events might enable that form a wetty good onlying about the preare you to find out? I have watched sublimely grand ladies get out of a carriage, under the impression that the accident of events might enable one to form a pretty good opinion about the presence of crinoline. But no jupes-cages ever turned up; the robe I lis into a monotonous spread, trails on the ground, and is as irritating to surrounding human nature as the old crinoline nuisance. Gentlemen have to dodge about in the drawing room, and on the pathway of gardens and parks. These dresses like the old crinoline, to my kinowiedge have caused some men to come out with wicked-oaths in French, and I do not see why this fashion should also cause ladies to burn to death as in the earlier days of crinoline. In the streets of Paris some ladies wear a dress which appears to be crino incless, until it suddenly and abruptly spreads out at the buttom as if a single hoop were employed. What is this? A windy day at the sesside might relieve one's doubting mind. I strongly suspect this is the last ring—a horrid cage. If crinoline is expiring, it does hard in Paris. The ladies at the markets still wear crinoline, and so do the ladies of the kitchen, therefore I suspect crinoline is hovering still about in all classes of society. Now, those interested in this momentous question will say, why don't you go to the fashion books for information? Ask an audience of M—e W—t in the Rue de la Paix. Do you think you can say anything positive after all this? One magazine of the fashions tells us—"Haking our impressions from certain high indications, we think we go so far as to declare that a gradual abandonment of crinoline is taking place in all classes of society." You then turn to the colored plates, and there you find a dress worn by a lovely oreature, the bottom of which is occupying nearly the whole width of the plate. What keeps out its wast spreading proportions? As when you think of time and eternity, or any other sublime subject, the mind wanders into dim confusion. Let us see what La Toilette de Paris says—that is an suttorit

Do you not observe, ladies, that here is the same Do you not observe, ladies, that here is the same hesitation of which you complain in England? Is it that there are no original and great minds just now in Paris as of old to exclaim—"This is the fashion for October; wear it all the world?" If you ask me to sum up, my answer is, I believe orinoline is only half out, and something quite as bad is half in. We are probably passing through a period or transition. It will be interesting for some time to come to look for the day when humanly can write.—Crinolina fuil.

From South America.—The fortunes of war in South America are decidedly in favor of Lonez and the Paraguayans. The last battle, fought on September 22, before the works at Curuguaty, was a positive and damaging defeat for the allies. Their army was driven back with heavy slaughter, and almost their entire fleet disabled and forced to retire. The present condition of the allied army, and what is more important, allied finances, do not promise an early advance against the formidable and what is more important, allied finances, do not promise an early advance against the formidable defences of the enemy. The alliance between Brazil, Uruguay, and the Argentine Confederation, is also likely to be forced apart by intestine divisions. The rumor that France stands behind Brazil, and dictates the policy to be pursued, is the firebrand which has produced the conflagration in the allied camp. In the meantime, Lopez is strengthening his army by all the means in his power, and fights with a courage and determination not easy to evercome. If the alliance is dissolved and the war abandoned, the chances are that the peace between Brazil, Uruguay and the Argentine Confederation will not long be preserved.

California Wines.—The Solano (California) Pross gives an account of the principal vineyards in that county. One planter has about lifteen thousand vines, part of which were set out in 1860, the rest in 1864. In this vineyard there are seme foreign varieties of which the Museat flourishes best, but the California grape prodominates. Mr. Schultz will raske this year about two thousand gallons of wine. Another firm of Germans have a vineyard of about sixty acres on the sunny slope of the Suscel Mountain. They have sixty thousand vines, the California predominating, but foreign varieties doing well, with the exception of the Tokay. This vineyard was planted in 1854 and will produce this year over fifteen thousand gallons of wine.
